HOW WE CONDUCTED OUR STUDY

The research consists of a survey, Insights In-Depth® sessions (a proprietary web-based tool used to conduct voice-facilitated virtual focus groups) involving 97 people from our Task Force organizations, and one-on-one interviews with 44 men and women in the US.

The national survey was conducted online or over the phone in October and November 2016 among 3,570 respondents (374 black, 2,258 white, 393 Asian, and 395 Hispanic) between the ages of 21 and 65 currently employed full-time in white collar occupations, with at least a bachelor’s degree. Data were weighted to be representative of the US population on key demographics (age, sex, education, race/ethnicity, and Census Division). The base used for statistical testing was the effective base.

The survey was conducted by NORC at the University of Chicago under the auspices of the Center for Talent Innovation (CTI), a non-profit research organization. NORC was responsible for the data collection, while CTI conducted the analysis.

In the charts, percentages may not always add up to 100 because of computer rounding or the acceptance of multiple responses from respondents.
Racial tensions divide Americans

WE LIVE IN A SEGREGATED NATION

SEGREGATION makes it easier for Americans to be unaware of the stubborn obstacles to equal civil rights for citizens of color. The workplace is one of few settings where we commonly interact across racial and ethnic lines.

WE DON'T LIVE TOGETHER...

WOULD YOU SAY race relations between whites and blacks are very good, somewhat good, somewhat bad, or very bad?1

WE DON'T SOCIALIZE TOGETHER...

The members of our social networks are likely to be members of our own race/ethnic group3

...BUT WE DO WORK TOGETHER.

“For most adult citizens, the single most likely site of integration—of genuine social interaction across racial lines—is the workplace.”4

—Cynthia Estlund, author, Working Together: How Workplace Bonds Strengthen a Diverse Democracy

* For data referenced in this infographic, “Latino” refers to those who identify as being of Latino or Hispanic descent.
Race relations affect employees...

EXTERNAL TENSIONS SPILL INTO THE WORKPLACE

MOST PROFESSIONALS OF COLOR have encountered discrimination outside of the workplace. Black professionals are the group most likely to experience discrimination or fear it.

EMPLOYEES WHO HAVE EXPERIENCED discrimination/bias outside of work and/or are fearful of discrimination/bias/violence for themselves or family

“\I cannot check being a black woman at the door when entering the workplace. These social issues impact me. I have a young son, and how he engages with the police is a real concern—one that carries over into my morale and productivity at work.”

EMPLOYEES WHO REGULARLY FEEL ISOLATED AND/OR ALIENATED AT WORK

BLACK EMPLOYEES who say it is never acceptable at their companies to speak out about experiences of racial bias are...

- Nearly 3 times as likely to intend to leave their companies within a year
- 13 times as likely to be disengaged
- More than 3 times as likely to feel they can’t bring their whole selves to work

Understand the impact of bias on employees

Talking about race at work benefits the business

Employees Benefit when they feel they can discuss race relations at work.

“Leaders think a response would distract us from the business, but actually the silence is more distracting. When there’s an elephant in the room, it makes a company look cowardly not to address it in some way, even if it’s only internally.”

—White female focus group participant

When Companies Address Race Publicly, the Brand Benefits

Among Respondents who are aware of companies responding to societal incidents of racial discrimination or bias, the majority say the response made them view the company in a more positive way.

Foster Internal Conversations

- Acknowledge that racial tension is an issue
- Create the circumstances for productive conversations
- Enable one-on-one conversations
- Empower small group discussions
- Bring in outsiders
- Hold a town hall
- Host a discussion within your company’s employee resource groups (ERGs)

Take a Public Stance on Race

- Release a public company statement arguing against racial injustice
- Share guidance from Diversity and Inclusion and HR specialists publicly
- Take other public action

Breaking the Silence

“Race is our country’s original sin. We like to think we’re postracial, but there is so much understandable pain associated with our complicated relationship with race—including the reality that white people don’t wish to be blamed and often want to ignore that there is a problem. All of us have been impacted.”

—Kendra Thomas, Vice President, Global Head of Diversity & Inclusion, Pearson

Certain Circumstances would make employees more comfortable discussing race relations at work.

“‘I think senior leaders should model how to talk about race. They can set the example.’”

—White female focus group participant

Our Data Shows that employers, as well as employees, benefit when colleagues feel they can talk about race at work. But it’s up to employers to help break the silence.
